Chiefs do it!

Last year they said the Chiefs couldn't win in the Big 11. They did. This year they said the Chiefs couldn't again.

The Carbondale MIRROR is people-oriented throughout, but Alice's Through the Looking Glass may just mention you or a friend or some people you know.

Radio announcer frees those 'blues'

By NAN WATERS

His silky, soothing voice in the early morning hours is a better eye-opener than a cup of Easter's Choice.

Five mornings a week, from six to ten, he wakes you up, at 6:30 on the AM radio dial, with a potpourri of easy-to-listen-to music, weather reports, fun and frivolities.

He's Carbondale's WEJL morning man, with the improbable name, Gene Free, which also happens to be his own.

Most people ask "What was your name before you changed it?"

He didn't.

His stint at Lackawanna County's oldest radio station (it was formerly WQAN) began 19 years ago when he joined the company as part-time weekend newsmen, who also "ran the machine" for WEJL's FM rock sister station, WJZY.

Now he spins records four hours daily, plus from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays, and in addition, the station's production director, promotion director and assistant program director. He puts in many consecutive 10- and 11-hour days.

"Listeners think you just come in and do your show and go home. It's not that way at all."

A production head, he's in charge of all commercials that go on the air. In his spare time, he free lances as a commercial announcer, peddling wares for the Globe Store, and others, and working through Rich Ross's Scranton ad agency.

And what does he do in his off-hours? Like the postman who takes a walk on his day off, he collects recordings of funny commercials, and spends a lot of time listening to other radio stations.

And what does Gene Free like to be called?

"I say 'I'm an announcer'."

Featured in 'The Catholic Light'

Former city priest changes with the times

Monsignor William Fleming, who was once stationed at St. Rose of Lima Church in Carbondale is featured in the latest issue of "The Catholic Light," the newspaper of the Scranton Diocese.

Msgr. Fleming is now the pastor of Annunciation Church in Williamsport. The story in the Sept. 3 issue of the newspaper addresses itself to the former city priest's continuing to "introduce fresh pastoral ideas approved by the Church and to offer leadership for those in his area."

However, according to the story penned by Monsignor Joseph M. Champet, it was not always that easy for Msgr. Fleming to change.

Hardly... "I guess you could say I'm an announcer. You could put on a guy's tombstone, he was an announcer. You could go on being an announcer forever. I like to think of myself as a communicator."

Gene Free didn't always think of himself as such. There was a time when his goal was to become a Roman Catholic priest. With his brown curly hair and sincere expression, he would have looked the role in a clerical collar.

He also considered police work. But three years into his seminary training, while studying at the University of Scranton, he became interested in communications, and was graduated with a degree in that field. He's been communicating ever since.

He'll be 25 on Dec. 15, he's single (take note, girls), and lives with his parents at 140 Duane St. A native of Jersey City, N.J., he "likes to think of my family as a train. I'm the engine, there are five sisters 'in between, and my little brother, age 13, is the caboose."

Only one of them, a sister, has shown any interest in journalism, but they're all fascinated with radio.

Gene Free likes to think of himself as everybody's friend, whether on the street or on the air. He relates to his listeners, and their needs. "For example, he doesn't tell his WEJL audience that the weather will be partly cloudy, that it might rain. He prefers to tell them, 'Better take your umbrella along.'"

The worst blunder he can remember making was when he gave a weather report that "There is a chance of schneiders." To cover up, he ad libbed. Or maybe a 20 percent chance of German shepherds.

Free loves his work, and prides the WEJL staff for its lack of back-biting and competition. "We've got great people to work with." He has nothing but praise for general manager Joe Silva, the staff and management, and young Andy Thomas, the new "Issue Line" talk show host.

Host a talk show?

Would he like to host a talk show? Not really. It requires a lot of quick thinking and keeping informed.

He likes all kinds of music, except for polkas and country. "I guess I could take modern country," he adds, but he's no Kenny Rogers fan.

His radio idol, when he was growing up in Carbondale and hanging out at WEJL, were the late Bill Pierce (Mr. Radio), Paul MacNamara and Joe Silva.

WEJL is one of 600 ABC affiliates, Free points out, and feels his station keeps "listeners informed as to what's going on in their own backyards. He believes the station should be an anchor in the community in regard to public service."

Queried as to what constitutes good taste in playing records with questionable lyrics, Free says WEJL strives to adhere to the rigid code of the NAB... National Association of Broadcasters.

He also admits he doesn't feel Rod Stewart's recording of "Tonight's the Night" motivates up to the code.

Asked whether he felt a huge dose of healthy ego is vital to success in radio, Free replied "Self-confidence, not ego, is important." He firmly believes that "TV is show biz...radio is a real life."

What's down the career road for this young, interesting communicator? What does he hope is down the highway?

A job in one of the major radio markets for which, as he says, "You have to be in the right place at the right time." Or, a post in management or programming in one of the stations in the Top 50.

Arson fire guts Richmondale home

By PETE SMITH

Fire authorities are listing the cause of a fire which destroyed a vacant home in the Richmondale section of Fell Township early Sunday morning as "definitely arson," the Mirror learned Monday.

Firemen from Forest City, Vandling, Brownvale, and Fell Township battled the early morning blaze which erupted in the home off Route 11 which, according to Fell Township Police Chief Jim Borosky, was discovered around 2:30 a.m. on the scene.

Fire authorities are labeling the fire arson since the house was vacant and there wasn't any power or utilities in the home.

Borosky noted that authorities were at the scene to try and determine the cause of the blaze, but that it hadn't been established as of yet.

The state police fire marshal will be called to the scene to investigate, the police chief said.

The glow from the spectacular blaze lit the early morning sky as flames ate at the wooden structure, some observers told the Mirror.

Forest City firefighters received the call first, Borosky noted, and then firefighters from Gratten Singer Hose Co., Simpson, and Vandling Hose Company were summoned, as were firemen from Brownvale.

Ownership of the home is uncertain, Borosky said, but added that the last known owner of the home was Mary Drosch of Richmondale. The Mirror also learned there was no insurance on the structure.

Firemen were on the scene for three hours with the last unit leaving around 5:30 a.m.

No injuries were suffered by firefighters while fighting the blaze. Further information on the blaze was unavailable at press time since Fell Township Fire Chief Andrew Graystock was out of town.

The investigation into the cause of the blaze is continuing.

Gentex gets Defense Department E award

Gentex Corp., Carbondale, received the Defense Department's Quality Excellence Award during a ceremony last Wednesday at company headquarters.

The award recognizes the high quality of products manufactured by Gentex's Life Support Division which produces protective headgear, communications equipment and respiratory systems. Gentex Life Support Products are used by U.S. and Allied military personnel.

Lt. Col. John Lambert, commander of the Defense Contract Administrative Services Management Area, Reading, Pa., presented the award, a five-by-seven-foot flag, to Gentex president L. Peter Frieder, Jr.

In accepting the flag, Frieder said "It is an honor to be singled out for this award which is really a testimonial to the hard work and dedication of our employees. I am proud of our contributions to the defense of our country and deeply appreciate the recognition bestowed on us."

Gentex was nominated for the award under a Defense Department Contractor Assessment Program that evaluates contractor performance according to specified criteria. In each of three categories judged Gentex received scores of 90 percent or better.

According to W. Harvey Jacon, managing director of the Life Support Division, "the company's quality success is due to continual improvement in Gentex technology capabilities to design and produce advanced military helmet systems for all U.S. Forces. Gentex employees identify with the need of military personnel whose life is at stake to have the finest quality in their personal equipment."

In addition to military life support systems, Gentex manufactures commercial protective headgear, industrial fabrics for protective garments and polycarbonate lenses for safety and prescription eyewear.

Founded in the 1880s, the company was originally one of the country's largest producers of silk.

The advance of synthetic fibers in the 1920s and 1930s forced the company into other product lines. It was reorganized in 1932 into General Textile Mills by Maroon and Leonard Frieder, grandfather and father of the current president. In 1958 it was renamed Gentex Corporation.

During World War II, Gentex supplied many of the heavy duty silk cargo-dropping parachutes used by Allied Forces. Following the war, lightweight laminated boxes designed as parachute packing cartons were adapted to other military uses. From this basic technology the company began development of its lightweight military helmets.

Today Gentex is the Free World's largest manufacturer of military helmet systems containing protection, communications and respiratory components. Gentex helmets are used by tank corps, infantry, airmen, ship personnel and also by commercial helicopter pilots.

Along with its main plant in Carbondale, the company operates manufacturing facilities in Dudley, Mass., Derry, N.H., and Pomona, Calif.

In addition to Col. Lambert, Defense Department contract personnel in attendance at the award ceremony were Major Tom Britt, representing the quality control assurance director, Philadelphia Region, Department of Defense, Francis Smith, chief of quality, Reading District Office, Frank Wengen, supervisor, Wilkes-Barre branch office, and Mary S. Mancuso, resident quality assurance specialist at Gentex.

The outdoor ceremony was also attended by engineers, manufacturing supervisors and employees of the company's Life Support Division.
